

Kanye in a goof of Legend

TALK ABOUT A BIRTHDAY surprise. During a speech at John Legend's birthday party Thursday night, Kanye West admitted he was once wrong about something.

While praising his pal and longtime collaborator, the headstrong rapper said he remembered advising Legend not to use the word "ordinary" in the title of his smash-hit breakout single, "Ordinary People," back in 2005.

"I was incorrect about that one," acknowledged the usually cocky West.

The speech was a highlight of the star-studded bash, which celebrated Legend's 36th birthday as well as the 10th anniversary of his debut album, "Get Lifted."

The singer, whose birthday is

Dec. 28, was joined by gorgeous model wife Chrissy Teigen, West and his wife, Kim Kardashian, and around 40 friends for dinner at Catch in the Meatpacking

District. A spy tells us the Wests arrived late for the meal, but the people sitting opposite Teigen and Legend (L) were hastily moved so the couple could sit across from the birthday boy.

"John and Chrissy were very cute," said the diner. "At one point, John was leaning his head on her shoulder and she was resting her hand on the top of his head and kissing his head."

Toward the end of dinner, the party was joined by A-listers including Robert De Niro and wife Grace Hightower, Katie Couric and husband John Molner. "Katie gave John (Legend) a big kiss on the lips when she arrived," said a party guest. The entire group moved upstairs to Catch Rooftop to continue the party.

Legend was surprised with a piano-shaped cake, and everyone sang "Happy Birthday."

After dinner, the bash headed upstairs, where Q-Tip was spinning. "Kanye's 'Yeezus' came on and he rapped along to his own song," a spy tells us.
